Tangled is one of Disney's most underrated movies, telling the classic tale of Rapunzel being locked in the tower, but with the usual color, vibrance, and energy that comes from a Disney animation. The story involves quite a few changes from the original, like Rapunzel's magic hair and her romance with Flynn, and of course, it adds plenty of songs along the way. With the excellent voice of Mandy Moore taking on the bulk of the singing, there's a lot to enjoy in this one, with songs that inspire, and of course, a fantastic villain number from Mother Gothel. Whether it's a romantic moment between Rapunzel and Flynn, or an epic Disney villain song, Tangled truly has it all, but which song is best? 8 "When Will My Life Begin (Reprise 1)" This song is one that crops up quite a few times within the movie, but this is perhaps the most forgettable of them. It's not that it's a bad song, it's just a very quick one, only lasting for a minute. However, it does showcase the emotion and turmoil that Rapunzel goes through when making this decision. This version is the point where she questions her own wish to leave the tower. She sees things more from her mother's perspective, clearly being manipulated as she contemplates if she truly is safer at home, and having this moment is an important one in highlighting just how much of a grip Mother Gothel has on her emotions. 7 "When Will My Life Begin (Reprise 2)" Another reprise version of "When Will My Life Begin" comes when Rapunzel does actually get out of her tower and has a real moment of doubt. She goes from pure ecstasy to total panic within seconds, going on an emotional journey of highs and lows throughout the song. This number has a great orchestral score behind it which is really powerful, and seeing Rapunzel and Flynn's behavior in the scene is funny. But ultimately, Rapunzel settles on this being the moment her life will begin, and she sings powerfully to finish the song in style. 6 "Healing Incantation" This is the song that Rapunzel sings when she is using her hair to heal others, which pops up a couple of times within the movie. It's a fun little song that has a nice melody to it and highlights Rapunzel's voice nicely, with Mandy Moore putting a soft touch into this song. It works well for the moment that it is in, setting up the healing and trying to make others feel better. However, while it's a good song, it doesn't stand up to some of the more iconic numbers in this movie. 5 "Mother Knows Best (Reprise)" Later on in the movie when Mother Gothel finds Rapunzel outside of the tower, she gets to sing her classic song again. However, this time things get swapped, with Mother Gothel singing about how Rapunzel knows best, using reverse psychology to trick her into thinking Flynn doesn't really care about her. Her excellent voice really kicks in here, having a lot of big vocal moments which really helps to make this song thrive. It continues to showcase Mother Gothel and her manipulating tactics, only this time there is an element of desperation about her and what she's doing, knowing that Rapunzel is slipping away. 4 "When Will My Life Begin?" This is the opening number for the movie and it's certainly one of the greatest. It's full of energy and that instantly sums up what Rapunzel is like as a character, someone who will bound around being tons of fun, despite the fact she's singing about being trapped in a tower having to do the same things every day. The song and how much she gets done in a day showcase how much energy she has as a character, while it also provides the connection to the lanterns being on her birthday. The balance of the upbeat section and then slowing down to be a little more emotional is really well struck, and it creates a catchy and enjoyable song to kick things off in the movie. 3 "Mother Knows Best" When it comes to villain songs, Disney really knows how to get the best out of them. Many of Disney's greatest hits come from the villains, and this is certainly one of them. While villain songs are typically menacing and scary, this is the complete opposite, with the kind, warm vocals being soothing and pleasant, with this song being catchy and fun to listen to. However, that's the entire point, with this being all about Mother Gothel trying to manipulate Rapunzel, convincing her that she knows what is right and that staying in the tower is best for her. The fact that she's doing it out of her own selfish needs is what ends up making this song eerie and well-suited to a villain, but it is very fun to listen to at the same time. 2 "I've Got A Dream" This is the funniest song in the movie, with the characters from inside the tavern initially looking mean and scary, until they break out into a big song. Everyone singing about their dreams and wishes creates a funny moment that nobody expects until it happens, but a lot of comedy is put into the number. It's fun and vibrant, with a ton of energy throughout. Having so many different voices involved throughout the song also helps, as it just adds a different dynamic in comparison to the other songs. It's one that everyone can sing and dance along with, being a catchy tune. 1 "I See The Light" When it comes to Tangled, there is no doubt that this is the highlight of the movie. This is the epic moment when Rapunzel finally sees the floating lanterns, with Flynn going above and beyond to get her the best view on a boat, with the two of them having a romantic moment together. It's the point where things finally click for both of them about how they feel for one another, and it makes for an emotional scene. It has become one of Disney's greatest love songs, with the powerful lyrics and the fantastic melody, this all comes together to create a perfect Disney moment.
